The University of Nebraska–Lincoln is among the nation’s top 50 public universities, a member of the Big Ten Conference and its academic equivalent, the Committee on Institutional Cooperation. Membership in the CIC leverages faculty, funding, facilities, investments and ideas to help us all collectively succeed and compete well in the global marketplace.

Motivated by our vision for a bigger, better UNL as part of the Big Ten, we are working to elevate the scope, scale and influence of UNL. By 2020, we intend for UNL’s enrollment to be 30,000, for our research expenditures to be in the $300 million range and to be able to claim a 6-year graduation rate of 70 percent. We are also planning for a significant increase both in the number and recognition of tenured faculty by 2020.

UNL is now home to nationally prominent athletic and research endeavors. For example, inside the new addition to Memorial Stadium, the Center for Brain, Biology and Behavior (CB3) houses UNL researchers who are at the forefront in the study of genetics, neuroscience, physiology, cognition and other areas of brain science. Researchers are furthering the understanding in diverse areas, including concussions and brain injuries, addiction, learning disabilities, early childhood development, and the physiological foundations of our political persuasions.

Nearby, the Nebraska Athletic Performance Lab enables researchers from multiple teams to address topics that relate to human performance and health, technology, nutrition, psychology and learning.

No other university in the nation, to our knowledge, is putting athletics and academics together to conduct research in this way.

Our growing connections with other nations are bringing new richness to an increasingly diverse and international student population. An established American Exchange Center in partnership with Xi’an Jiaotong University in China is helping to bring to life a new global focus.

All that we are doing to continue to move our university forward—to broaden our authentic engagement with our state, nation and world—also brings more opportunity to our students, faculty and alumni.

GROWTH

The fall 2013 first-time freshman class is one of the largest ever. The 4,420 students represent a 12.3% increase from the previous year. Three of the largest graduating classes in UNL’s history have been in the past three years. During this time, UNL has conferred 15,124 degrees.

WORLD WIDE

With students from 135 countries, programs in over 70 countries, and research on all seven continents, UNL engages the world. Through the EN Thompson Forum on World Issues, international learning communities, and minors in six languages, UNL provides all students with opportunities to internationalize their education, acquiring the skills necessary for an increasingly interconnected world. IANR’s Science Literacy Initiative has hired its first subject-matter faculty cluster. This team of discipline-based educational researchers will focus on empowering people to identify and analyze problems and make informed decisions concerning food, fuel, water, landscape and human issues, and the interrelations of agriculture and natural resources stewardship. Ultimately, the Initiative will bring 36 new faculty members to UNL.

CORE VALUE: RESEARCH

ConAgra is the first commitment from a private-industry partner at the new Nebraska Innovation Campus. ConAgra has worked with UNL for several years in food science research. This partnership is a perfect match to the campus focus of food, fuel and water.

CORE VALUE: STEWARDSHIP

In June 2012, the UNL launched an update of the campus master plan and development of a landscape master plan. The plans were approved by the Board of Regents on September 20, 2013, and will guide the University’s growth for the next 15 years and beyond. The website planbig.unl.edu contains information about the plan and planning process.

DISTINCTION

The College of Law has launched a doctorate of juridical sciences degree program. UNL is the only US law school to offer both a master’s and doctorate in space law. In fact, the juridical sciences degree program is the only doctoral-level space law program in the U.S.

TRADITION

During the 2012-2013 academic year, UNL raised its Academic All-American total to 307. In doing so, UNL became the first school, across all divisions, to reach 300. Notre Dame is second with 227. No other school has reached 200 Academic All-Americans.
